2. IQAC Initiated Training Programs for Faculty

To enhance the academic and research capabilities of our faculty, we organized two comprehensive independent training programs. These initiatives were designed to provide faculty members with essential skills that are crucial for their professional development. Additionally, orientation sessions were integrated into the regular faculty meetings held throughout the academic year, ensuring ongoing support and guidance.

Furthermore, we hosted a two-day Faculty Development Program that focused on equipping our educators with a diverse array of skills vital for effective classroom management and innovative pedagogy. The program emphasized the ethical use of AI tools in both academic and research contexts, along with hands-on training in data analysis tools specifically for quantitative research. This holistic approach aims to empower faculty to enhance their teaching methods and contribute more effectively to their fields.

3. Expert feedback was sought from External Research Advisory members

The RAC is composed of a diverse group of individuals, including internal faculty members from IIPR and two esteemed external experts who bring a wealth of knowledge and experience from their respective institutions: Government First Grade College (GFGC) in Holenarasipura, Hassan, Karnataka, and the University of Mysore, Karnataka. These external members are recognized for their significant contributions to academia and research, providing valuable insights during the evaluation process.

Throughout this presentation, students are guided through the intricacies of their chosen dissertation topics, ensuring they thoroughly explore relevant theoretical frameworks and literature. They receive constructive feedback on their proposed materials and methods, which is vital for the integrity of their research. Additionally, the process emphasizes the importance of ethical reporting, preparing students to conduct and present their findings responsibly and credibly. This collaborative effort helps students navigate the complexities of dissertation writing, ultimately enhancing their academic experience and fostering the development of high-quality research.
